

I would like to make my view of the green belt development made . the answer is NO . reasons

- 1 It has been designated as green belt and should be protected
- 2 there is a thriving horticultural area
- 3 people can escape the concrete jungle by walking on green land
- 4 helps people overcome mental issues
- 5 has areas to play green belt sympathetic sports
- 6 allows people of all ages to exercise in tranquil surroundings

If the area is developed would bring extreme and impossible pressure on the infrastructure of the area this includes transport, electricity, gas, water, food shops, doctors schools refuge etc not forgetting the violence that a highly dense population brings as well as police not being able to install law and order.

Above all this borough has a label of the greenest leafiest London area and this development by private enterprises after a quick buck is a disgrace that the council is allowing it to happen especially when as representatives of the people of the borough you seem to be not listening to the majority.

Enfield is a leafy jewel in the crown of London and this charismatic market town should not be overrun by people gaining finically.
