

This plan looks like 1936 all over again. What makes those in power think that they know the will of the people who elected them? Enfield has fought in the past and will continue to fight to maintain its green space.

Yes, we have to acknowledge progress but we also have to consider the changing needs of the population. There is no longer the same demand for access to stations for commuting into London and the future economy will make these even more redundant.

Enfield simply does not need the number of new homes being proposed by the council, and the comments made by those in power do nothing to further their cause. Only the property developers and their cronies stand to benefit from this, and the comments made by key Labour Party councillors show great disservice to their party.

Stop it now!!
